We beg to notify our Customers that a Strike has taken place at these Works.

It is not a question of Wages.

It is not a question of Hours.

It is caused by the Dyers' Union trying to force 4 Heads of Departments to join the Union against their will.

We regret that it will cause unadvoidable annoyance to our Customers, but trust that, under the circumstances, they will forgive us.

The Commission will hear both sides of the case exhaustively, and the public can form no useful judgment until all the evidence is before it. It may be excused, for the splendid courage displayed by the however, for drawing two interim conlusions from Mr. Dickinson's statement. One is that the Government has been a very lax administrator and a very poor friend to the consumer throughout the whole business. The other is that the first round, at any rate, of this contest favour of Labour. The revelation that the appears that some 13,000 officers of the Government gave the owners an additional were nearly trebling the average is really purely naval duties. The Supreme War Council is now con idering the final terms of the armistice. Military and naval clauses are to be included which will define Germany's postwar status and will form the basis of the Treaty of Peace. The German Navy, as such, will no longer exist. In addition to those warships and submarines which already week have been handed over to the Allies, what remains of Germany's proud Fleet will have to be surrendered. Her submarines and their docks will be destroyed, he auxiliary cruisers dismantled, her naval quest that it would be crushing defeat of Germany could not to notify those who had arranged to hold meetensign banished from the seas. Possibly a few may find a niche in some naval chamber of horrors for the benefit of future generations. The rest will join their victims at the bottom of the sea. In the case of the warships a decision is not so easy. There will be a very large number of battleships, cruisers, and destroyers—some, doubtless, obsolete, but others of quite recent construction. It has been suggested that all these should had before it yesterday, and came to a decision be sunk. Our Merchant Seamen.

Speaking at the annual meeting of the Imperial Merchant Service Guild in Liverpool last night, Lord Muskerry said that neither the Navy nor the Army could have "carried on" during the war without the assistance of the mercantile marine. But merchant seamen in running the submarine "blockade," our armed forces would have been useless and the country would have been reduced to starvation. What the merchant seamen did as combatants, however, is not so well known. From the Guild's "Victory" report it Merchant Service were given commissions during the war, and were engaged in and eighty appointments to the Distinguished Service Order. Of the Service's losses the report states that "14,661 gallant souls laid down their lives in the cause of freedom and of right. Reckless of hazard, heedless of consequences, they died that our Empire, as 'Mistress of the Seas, should live." Lord Muskerry urged yesterday that the Merchant Service should receive Government recognition and support. Certainly both its record in the

Up to the present a comparatively small proportion of the doctors and nurses employed by the Army has been restored to ivilian service. Mr. Churchill stated that mmediately on taking office he was struck y the slowness of the demobilisation of these classes, and issued urgent instruc-tions to have it speeded up.

In reply to Colonel Walter Guinness, rchill stated that the arrangement by which the vicarages of Roman Catholic churches in the occupied territory were not used for the billeting of troops was settled by Marshal Foch on representations from the Archbishop of Cologne. The idea of Mr. Churchill in setting up his Parliamentary Private Secretary, Mr. MacCallum Scott, as "members' friend," ought to save an immense amount of time in the House of Commons. Members anxious to obtain information on some point connected with the Army will be able to go to Mr. Churchill's room in the House on Mondays and Thursdays, and will there find Mr. Scott with officials from the War Office ready to supply the information they desire.

The pancake used is not, it seems, a genuine concoction of ordinary batter, but a dummy constructed of horsehair and

It is rumoured that the negotiations that have been passing between the Asquithian Liberals and the Coalition Liberals have quite broken down, though a faint hope is entertained that the forthcoming meeting of Liberals of both sections may lead to a approchement. The Asquithians find it ifficult to accept the Coalition Liberals as being essentially the Liberal Party, but that will have to come. In the meanwhile the Coalition Liberals are inclined to treat

From this was deducted the six million for royalties, making the profits 18½ millions, as compared with 13 millions; which was equivalent to 15—Output, 253 million tons; value at pithead, 12s. 5½d.; profits, 21½ millions. This, the witness explained, was after the 4s. per ton limitation had been put on under the Coal Limitations Act.

The submarine absolutely killed the export trade, with the result that the railways were congested with wagons. At one time no fewer than 11,000 wagons on railways in South waters billed with coal could not be got rid of owing to the absence of ships. The large profits were from coke ovens and by-products works belonging to the collieries, which branch was not brought under Government control. As a result of the submarine activity and the call for men for the Army there was a discontinuity of work.

MR. M'VEAGH.

Mr. J. MacVeagh seconded. He ventured to say that there was not a corner in Ireland where such a tale as had been told of Belfast could be unfolded. No Catholic was allowed to enter Belfast Corporation until a Conservative Government compelled it to re-arrange its wards, and thus give representation to the minority. EFFECT OF SUBMARINES.

COLLIERY PROFITS.

Replying to further questions by the Chairman, Mr. Dickinson said that for the first half of 1918 the average earned by the colliers was £149 per person per year, and for the three months to September of that year the amount earned averaged £169 per person. The price of coal from January to June of that year was 20s. per ton at the pit mouth, and from June to September 24s. 10d.

sioners were elected was as broad, if not broader, than the franchise of many other Harbour Trusts in these islands. He was not prepared to contest or admit that; that did not make the slightest difference to him. The question was, did it represent the people? He said that it did not, and no institution could live in Belfast, or anywhere else, that was not inspired by the democratic spirit, and based on democratic foundations. He knew that he would be defeated when he brought this question to the final test of a division, but, for his part, he should utilise every opportunity afforded to him to rivet public attention on, and to make a fight against, the perpetuation of a trust of this character, which was confined and restricted to a special class of the community. It had been said that the constitution of the Board was more broadly based and more democratic than the Harbour Trusts in Cork and Dublin, but in the Port and Docks Board of Dublin there were representatives of the Corporation. But there were no representatives of the Corporation in the Harbour Trust of Belfast.

An Hon. Member—The Lord Mayor.

Mr. Devlin said that he questioned very much whether the Lord Mayor was an ex-officio member, but, at all events, the Corporation, as such, had no representative on it, although it was the most reactionary and conservative board in Ireland, or in Great Britain. It was too progressive to have decent prepresentation on the Harbour Trust. The Catholics of Belfast numbered 100,000 in a population of 400,000, but not one of them was thought fit to be elected to this body.

An Hon. Member—Do you suggest that they should be adopted?

THE RELIGIOUS QUESTION.

What had religion to do with this? Well, religion, or irreligion, had everything to do with everything in Ireland. (Laughter.) In his judgment, no institution ought to stand where the great mass of the people were disfranchised, or where a small and infinitesimal minority of the population had all the votes. He disliked very much raising the question of religion, but the Catholics of Belfast were not allowed to have anything to say in the management of this trust. The salaries paid were £12,060 a year, and only £400 were paid to Catholics. There was but one Catholic employed, and 56 non-Catholics. It was said that these men were in a minority, and that minorities must suffer. He asked gentlemen opposite whether they thought it fair that the gentlemen who played upon public passion in this country, because they were in a minority, should, in a great trust of this character, allow not a single Catholic on the Board, and that, while the salaries paid to officials should be £12,000 to their friends, only £400 should be paid to a minority who were not represented on the Board. Not only were Catholics not represented on the Board, but Protestant labour was not represented. The Catholic population in Belfast was 100,000, out of something like 400,000, and the working classes were 85 per cent. of the entire population. Did anyone imagine that the workpeople of Belfast were going to allow themselves to be denied their fair rights in the adjustment of the concerns that touched their lives and affected their interests. What had religion to do with this? Well, moved by Sir Allan Smith, and seconded by Mr. Arthur Henderson, was unanimodely agreed to:—

"That this Committee, in order that its work may be accomplished as expeditiously and thoroughly as possible, divide itself into three sub-committees, with the following terms of reference:—
"(1) To make recommendations concerning (a) methods of negotiation between employers and trade unions, including the establishment of a permanent Industrial Council to advise the Government on industrial and economic questions, with a view to maintaining industrial peace; (b) methods of dealing with war advances; and (c) methods of regulating wages for all classes of workers, male and female, by legal enactment or otherwise.

"(2) To make recommendations as to the desirability of legislation for a maximum number of working hours and winding maintenance of the unemployment, and to make recommendations for the steps to be taken for its prevention, and for the maintenance of the unemployed in those cases in which it is not prevented both during the present emergency period and on a permanent basis."

Unrest and output are to be discussed by the whole Committee at the next meeting. On statements previously submitted by the parties, it was agreed that the Ministry of Labour should expend a chairman for each sub-committee. A time-table was arranged to permit of the report of the Joint Committee being circulated to all the delegates to the Industrial Conference for consideration prior to a further meeting of that Conference on April 4th.

The case of the disabled soldier came before the Industrial Training Section of the Ministry, and it was the duty of that section to deal with apprentices whose apprenticeship had been broken by the war. The State was bound to give assistance to these apprentices, and a scheme had been approved under which the apprentice would obtain something approximating to the wage which a journeyman unskilled worker would be carning. The question was, what proportion ought the State to contribute? The apprentice would be given the opportunity of completing his training either in a workshop or in some other way, to be are

Sir A. Griffith Boscawen replied that the Board of Agriculture recognised to the full all that the farmers had done during the war in producing food when they were appealed to. Food production was not merely an agricultural, but a great national question, and, therefore, not exclusively to be dealt with by the Board of Agriculture. The Government realised that it would be necessary to reconsider the whole scheme of the Corn Production Act, and it might be necessary both to extend the Act and to alter the guaranteed price in the Act, but to bring in a large bill altering and extending the Act at present would be most unwise. He agreed that it was a hardship that farmers should have a difficulty in disposing of their last year's corn crop, but the situation arose owing to the unexpectedly early ending of the war, and he was assured that it was going to regulate itself. Addressing farmers at Guildford yesterday. Lord Ernle, President of the Board of Agriculture, said that he thought that the labourer must to a large extent become a profit-sharer. He would then become a producer and an advocate of maintaining at a remunerative level the prices of agricultural produce. That solution was a long way off, but had proved most efficiencious in the Dominions for dealing with trade unionism. The Government would carry out the mandate to find land for Service men, though there could hardly be a worse moment for the experiment than the present. Some

Whilst the great trade unions had greatly improved the position of their members, the demands recently made ought not to have been put forward while the Prime Minister and his colleagues were trying to form a League of Nations. There was no justification for an ultimatum being presented to the Government at such a critical moment. Mr. Chamberlain—No, sir; I should like nothing better, but I am afraid that I could not do that. The House will see the extreme difficulty of dealing with a matter of such delicacy and complexity by question and answer. I will do my best to put the Order in a form which will meet the criticisms of substance which have been made, and which will facilitate recommencing and developing business as much as possible.

Viscount Peel thought that a good deal of the unrest was due to war-weariness and fatigue, which would right itself in the course of a few months. The necessity for vastly increased production was not, however, sufficiently recognised by certain sections of the workers. A great number of disputes and strikes had been settled privately by the delicacy and complexity by question and answer. I will do my best to put the Order in a form which will meet the criticisms of substance which have been made, and which will facilitate recommencing and developing business as much as possible.
